

501 Commons Blog Comment Policy

We encourage your comments on the 501 Commons blog, and hope you will join the discussions. Online tools can help us grow as a nonprofit community and we encourage all of our supporters to be involved. Let's treat each other with dignity and respect and build a strong and effective online community to make all Washington nonprofits stronger.

Please bear in mind that the information that you share in blog comments is public and can be viewed by all visitors. Please do your part in keeping our blog welcoming, safe and helpful for every member of our community.

All comments are reviewed before posting. We will remove or edit comments that contain any of the following:

- Personal attacks or name-calling
- Promoting a business, event, fundraising campaign, or website
- Obscene or foul language
- Personally identifiable information
- Accusations or allegations of improper conduct or criminal behavior toward any individual, organization or institution

If a comment is deleted, we will attempt to notify the commenter. Multiple violations of the comment policy will result in a user being banned from submitting comments.

We reserve the right to remove or edit comments that are off-topic, offensive, or are otherwise disruptive to the community. We will delete any messages that are spam and the commenter will be banned.

501 Commons is not responsible for the content of any comments.